What is your current occupation? Government Affairs Coordinator at the American Please describe your personality I consider myself an idealist, unconventional and I cherish my authenticity. My freedom is a top priority - I don't like to feel trapped or boxed in. In general, I tend to be and objective witness to complex situations, watching everything logically and without judgment. I like to beleive that my free-spirited natured can inspire others to embrace their independence.

Alternatively, when I'm struggling, I might feel like an outsider - or even an outcast. At times, it's hard for me to relate to others, especially in dramatic or emotional circumstances. In those cases, I often detach and distance myself, and can seem spacey.

At work and in my relationships, I strive to hold things together for others, to be the one people can trust and rely upon. I try to be kind and sensitive to their needs. My ideal work environment should feel like an extension of my family and allow me to be nurturing and compassionate. In my affective relationships, I am upfront, I make my intentions clear and I'm unafraid of commitment. For that reason, what works best for me is being with a partnet who clearly wants mt, who is loyal, protective and that I can lean on in times of doubt.
